A New County

In 1849, the North Carolina Assembly voted to create a new county, Alamance, from land located on the western side of Orange County.

This decision had many consequences the most urgent of which was the need for a new county seat and a courthouse.

Map shows the location of U S Post Offices.

The new county of Alamance. The eastern border was set 9 miles west of Hillsborough. The Commissioners attempted to locate the new County Seat as near as possible to the geographical center.

(see Star)

Governor Graham appointed nine commissioners to establish the new county seat. John Scott was one of the nine. The new town was named Graham in honor of the Governor.

One of the first tasks of the new commission was to purchase 75 acres in (or as close as possible) to the geographical center of the new county. This parcel of land was acquired at a cost of $603 dollars.

A portion of the land was surveyed, and the center of the new town was laid out around the courthouse square.

An auction was held to sell 68 lots on 7 streets.

(Stokes, Auction & Action, 1985)

At the auction held on September 15, 1851, John Scott purchased lots 52, 63, 63 1/2, and 64 (blue triangles). He built a log cabin on lot 63 (arrow). The original of this map was lost until 1939 when it was printed in the Alamance Gleaner.

John Scott built the first general store in Graham at this location (38 SW Court Square & 105 South Main Street).

The building is across the street from the W. J. Nicks Building.

John Scott and several others purchased land right next to lot #43 for a new church. (See arrow)

Sallie Walker Stockard (1869-1963)

Sallie was the great granddaughter of John and Margaret Scott. She was born on her parents' farm near Saxapahaw in 1869.

Sallie moved to Graham in the 1880s to attend high school. She stayed with her grandparents, Nancy Jane Scott Albright and John Gibbs Albright. Later in life, she wrote about her great grandmother, Margaret Scott and her extended family.

Sallie was the first female student to graduate from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Her master's thesis, entitled "The History of Alamance," was published in 1900.

Sallie visited an earlier version of the Alamance County Courthouse while writing The History of Alamance.

The Courthouse was remodeled and the changes were completed in 1923.

John and Margaret's legacy has had a lasting influence on the history of Graham, North Carolina. His efforts to get the town sited, named, and started will not be forgotten.

Special thanks to the descendants of John and Margaret Scott and to the staff and volunteers of Graham Presbyterian Church.
